

Tempora mutantur!

Dear Reader,

Being an old-fashioned dentist, I sometimes remember my basic Latin, which was a requirement to study dental medicine back then. But now, the times are changing! We live in an exciting age. Knowledge is produced in extremely large quantities every day and it is available as never before, thanks to the internet. Although society in general is hotly discussing globalization as if it were something new, the scientific community went global a very long time ago. Ever since there have been international scientific journals, the world's scientists have had the opportunity to exchange their results on a global platform. So for us, this is nothing new. However, something has changed: Where up to now, journals have been sent to us by post, and the journal of our choice was regularly delivered into our hands, the internet is slowly but surely changing our behavior. We now have the literature at our fingertips – we do not even need to physically go to the library to look at journals we do not subscribe to. By virtue of the internet, the whole world of scientific publications is available at a click.

This is true in theory, but there are still some obstacles to ideal realization. First, human behavior changes only slowly. Most people still prefer to read from paper than from the screen. (The so-called electronic office produces more paper than its predecessors!) Second, someone must pay for the publication. So far, it has been done by subscribing to a personal selection of journals in the printed version. Furthermore, publishers used to additionally offer their customers online access, as it is done for the Journal of Adhe- sive Dentistry, provided they had a subscription. This, of course, was the main obstacle against wide and frequent use of the online versions by scientific users.

The editors and the publisher of the Journal of Adhesive Dentistry have decided to further improve the service to our customers. I am proud to announce that starting late this summer, we will offer not only abstracts online, but also the opportunity to download full text articles in the pdf format. With every abstract, we will offer you a link, which brings you to our sales office where you can selectively purchase just the paper which interests you. The option of online credit card purchasing will enable us to provide this service in an effective manner. So dear readers, please go to www.jad.quintessenz.de and enjoy easier access to the latest knowledge in the field of dental adhesion. Once downloaded, you may read it right away on the screen, print it, or store it in your literature database.

Subscribers to the Journal can use this online service at no additional cost, which means that as a member of the Journal of Adhesive Dentistry community, you always have an advantage.

Sincerely yours,

J.-F. Roulet,
Editor-in-Chief
